No street addresses were ever given for the publisher. Mail order addresses in ads were always for Post Office boxes, first in New York City, later in Mt. Morris, Illinois.

Carlyle Books was an offshoot of Bee-Line Books, a prolific porn publisher started in 1964 by David Zentner, in conjunction with the owners of Kable News. Bee-Line proved to be very successful as a porn imprint, lasting well into the 1980s.

Interestingly, Carlyle Books was not the first mass-market imprint to be spun off of Bee-Line. Pinnacle Books was started by Carlyle in 1969 and sold to a conglomerate in 1973. The conglomerate was not interested in publishing porn, so Bee-Line continued under its original company. Whether Zentner retained an interest in Carlyle at the time of this new spin-off is unknown.

This imprint was not started as a mass-market imprint, but gradually evolved from a specialized porn imprint. The first few books in the series were erratically issued non-fiction books called Carlyle Specials, starting in 1975. Eventually some fiction was introduced but the character of the series did not change until 1977.

The big shift seems have occurred with the publication of Satan's Love Child by Brian McNaughton in May 1977. This book proved popular enough that Carlyle issued 3 more "Satan" books by McNaughton, each time reprinting the earlier titles. (These McNaughton books are the only Carlyle Books that are known to have had multiple printings.) The imprint was renamed Carlyle Books in May 1978 and from that point on the series was devoted almost entirely to genre fiction, with no more sexual content than was usual in contemporary genre fiction.

All books had ISBNs, in the form 0-503-0####-d, with the "d" representing the check digit and the 4 digits represented by the #s being the actual book number. Those same 4 digits also appeared on the covers, with a CS prefix and a hyphenated suffix. It is that form of the book number that has been used for all the citations herein.

Being partially owned by Kable News should have provided Carlyle Books more effective market penetration than otherwise but, at a time when the focus of paperback distribution was shifting from newsstands to bookstores, even the most effective newsstand distribution could not make them competitive with the established paperback imprints.

Almost all the books were original and most, but not all, were registered for copyright, leaving a pretty good record of Carlyle's publication schedule. From April 1979 to February 1980 four books a month were issued, after which publication became erratic once again and effectively ceased with the July 1980 titles. One book was issued in 1981 and another set of McNaughton books was issued in 1982.

Seven non-fiction titles are known, all sex-related. The fiction titles are all novels and are mostly genre fiction. There were 25 books that were either mystery, espionage or some other crime-oriented fiction. Seven volumes were science fiction and 13 were horror, most with supernatural elements, 3 of which were reissues of previous titles. There were 4 westerns and 2 adventure novels. Seven volumes were sex novels, 2 of which were reissues of Bee-Line books and one of which had previously appeared in hardcover. The remaining 10 books were miscellaneous or contemporary fiction. Everything not noted above as being a reprint was original. There were no collections or anthologies so there is no need for a Contents listing.

It should be noted that the set of 4 Brian McNaughton novels that appeared in 1982 were numbered 1 through 4, which strongly suggests that they constitute a series. Although the second and third novels do have a common character, as noted in the Author Index, below, the other books do not seem to be related.

Most books have cover credits, but too few have been seen to be comprehensive in this regard. A large number of the covers are photographic and have been noted even when not credited. Unfortunately most of the printed credits are to Roy Kuhlman for "cover design." In those instances where a book has a painted cover, there is usually a separate credit for the cover artist. There is no such separate credit for the photo covers, leaving me in a quandary as to whether Kuhlman personally produced the photographs. I have decided to include Kuhlman in the Artist Index, but have simply repeated the cover design credits. 50 covers appear in the Bookscans database, including the second printings of the two McNaughton books; scans of another 12 were seen elsewhere.

The observant user will notice that Jerry Boyajian has been credited as co-compiler of this bibliography. Jerry did most of the preliminary data-mining on this imprint and continued to keep me on track with new data right through to the finish. I literally could not have started or finished it without his invaluable help. Sadly, even with thirty years of combined research, there is still one book whose identity is unknown.
