

HILLMAN BOOKS

An overview

Alex Hillman (1900- 1967) was an ambitious publisher with his fingers in many pies. He published hardcover books, initially in partnership with Samuel Curl, the earliest under the imprint of William Godwin, Inc. He published magazines, mostly confession and true crime, following in Bernarr Macfadden's footsteps. He had his biggest success with Pageant, a digest-sized women's slick.

Hillman also published comic books and paperbacks, the latter in many different series and formats over a 25-year period. Even before Pocket Books appeared and began the revolution in mass-market paperbacks, Hillman was one of the first publishers to use the magazine racks to sell paperback books, pioneering the digest size for cheap reprints.

His digest paperbacks, unfortunately, were modeled after that subset of pulp magazines that reprinted mystery and western novels, usually in abridged form. For most of the 1940s Hillman digests competed with these pulps rather than with the smaller size paperbacks that were flooding the newsstands.

In 1943, at the height of his digest success, when he had 5 different imprints running simultaneously, Hillman issued a single mass-market size paperback, labeled a Hillman Detective Novel. If this was an experiment to test the waters for the smaller-size format, it would seem to have been a failure; no further volumes appeared.

Five years later Hillman issued a small format paperback edition of Jack Hanley's Let's Make Mary, which appeared at first to be an unnumbered one-shot. It was quickly followed by a line of similar books starting with number 2 and ending in 1951 with number 48.

The last of Hillman's digest series also folded in 1951, about the same time as the paperback series. A couple years later, Hillman used his Novel Selections subsidiary to issue reprints of two obscure Erskine Caldwell novels. It should also be noted, in passing, that additional printings of Let's Make Mary continued to appear sporadically during the 1950's.

His next paperback line was called Hillman Books and the initial run consisted of only 6 books, published in 1957. It was badly timed on Hillman's part, and was a victim of the distribution implosion caused by the demise of American News. Two years later the line resumed and picked up from the 1957 numbering. This time it was more successful, and was still going strong when Hillman sold his entire publishing empire to Macfadden in 1961 and retired to the life of a wealthy philanthropist.

Macfadden continued the paperback line, with completely new numbering sequences, initially dubbing them Hillman-Macfadden Books, then quickly renaming them Macfadden Books. Most of these in-between books were published by Bartholomew House, Macfadden's paperback subsidiary. I have included a list of the known Hillman-Macfadden Books as an appendix; they are not cross-referenced in any way. A few titles that were popular enough to merit multiple printings may also exist as plain Macfadden Books, with the same book number, but I have no documentation of such variants.

Although a few of these series carried the "ID" logo, they had no specific distributors' marks; it is believed that Hillman acted as his own distributor.

This volume is often mistaken for # 1 of the following series, whose first book was unnumbered. Several chapters were compared against a hardcover edition and only one minor trim was found. The uncredited cover is displayed in the Bookscans database.

The series predominantly lacks an imprint per se. The Hanley volume was identified as a Hillman Pocket Book on the title page. The first 27 books carry the description "A Hillman Publication" at the top of the cover. Numbers 28 through 48 have only an "HP" as an identifier somewhere on the cover. I have cited these as "Hillman" in the Author and Artist Indexes to separate it from the later series. The first book went through 6 printings over several years' time, each with a different cover, but no edition seen had a book number.

Most of the books were undated. The few dates we have suggest that most of the 1949 books were probably issued in pairs, while the books before and after that were probably issued singly. There is no evidence of multiple printings for any books other than Let's Make Mary. Number 7 is known to have 2 different covers but whether they represent two separate printings is not presently known.

Only three of the 48 books were originals; the other 45 were reprints. This imprint was unusual in having a high preponderance of westerns, 30 to be exact. There were only 6 mysteries, plus one original collection of true crime stories. There was one original science fiction book. The remaining fiction titles included 3 humor books and 1 public domain classic. The other six books were all non-fiction, three of which were about sex, including another original title.

In one of Hillman's magazines, Isaac Asimov's Pebble in the Sky was advertised as forthcoming but its publication was cancelled when the novel appeared in a pulp magazine, which Hillman apparently felt had saturated the market his paperbacks were aiming for.¹

There are no cover credits and very few covers are signed. Several of the western covers had appeared previously on different books in one or another of Hillman's digest series and are so noted in the Artist Index. 52 of the 54 covers, including four editions of Let's Make Mary, appear in the Bookscans database, one other has been seen elsewhere. Only the 4th printing of Let's Make Mary has not been seen.

This edition removes the division into parts, since it contains only Part One, and strips off the chapter titles as well. For maximum completeness, I have annotated the chapter titles into this list but since they are not actually present, they are not cross-referenced anywhere else.)

NOVEL SELECTIONS

 Format: short pb
 Price: 25¢

Novel Selections was a secondary company of Hillman's and was used to publish most of his digest size series. While there is no logo per se, the name Novel Selections appears prominently on the spines, in conjunction with the book numbers, so I have accepted it as the imprint for this series. The numbering was probably chosen to be deliberately higher than the last number in the preceding series.

Both books contain a notice saying "copyright assigned to Erskine Caldwell, 1953" which is probably an indication of when they were published. The books are otherwise undated. There are no ads in either book; it is not known if they were issued singly or simultaneously.

All of Caldwell's work is considered "mainstream," usually categorized as Regional fiction. The covers are unsigned and uncredited; both appear in the Bookscans database.

The first 6 books were issued in 1957, with a two year gap before the next volumes were issued. The ads in subsequent volumes do not list anything below 106 and suggest that books were being issued in threes at that time.

At the end of the run several books were issued with single digit numbers and a new set of prefixes. I have listed six books together; since there is no duplication of numbers among their three prefixes, I have assumed that they are all part of the same sequence. A seventh book numbered MF-1 has not been seen but it definitely post-dates the books numbered SP so I have listed it as a the start of a third number sequence.

Hillman seems to have been lax about registering copyrights as the series wound down and there are not enough known publication dates to be certain of how the later books were issued but it appears that by 1960 they were probably being issued four at a time, and possibly more by 1961. Some dates suggest that the later books were occasionally issued out of sequence.

In market reports published in The Writer for July 1959, July 1960 and August 1960 Samuel H. Post is listed as the editor. In July 1961 Charles R. Byrne is given as editor.

Westerns continued to be the most prolific genre, though they are nowhere near being dominant. There were 24 in all, including one non-fiction title and 2 movie novelizations. There were 16 crime and mystery titles, 2 of them non-fiction. As a sign of how much paperback publishing had changed since Hillman's first series, there were 21 reprinted novels that can best be described as "contemporary fiction," 6 of them foreign translations. There were also 18 original novels that might generously be lumped into this category, but would more honestly be described as "sleaze," being mostly about people's messy sex lives. There were 6 historical novels, 2 romances and 2 fantasy novels, one a movie novelization. There were 5 humor books, 1 war novel and another 18 random non-fiction titles, including 5 biographical works. 67 books were reprints, the other 46 were originals.

Numbers 106 to 111 carry cover credits; only a handful of others have signatures. As noted below, most the cartoons are equally anonymous. Photo covers have been particularized in the Artist Index, even though most of them are uncredited. All 114 covers appear in the Bookscans database.
