Lion Books was a small piece of a large publishing enterprise owned by Martin Goodman (1908-1992). Goodman started with a line of pulps in 1933, but he had bigger success with a comic book line in the 1940s. He also dabbled in digest-sized paperbacks in the 1940s with no long-term success. Lion Books had some ups and downs but was his most sustained paperback imprint and seems to have held its own until the distribution implosion in 1957. During the 1950s comic book sales plummeted so Goodman jumped into the men's adventure magazine field, eventually becoming one of its major players. In the early 1960s his comic book line resurged as the silver-age Marvel Comics, becoming successful enough that in 1968 Goodman was persuaded to sell his publishing empire to a large holding company, then known as Perfect Film & Chemical Corporation, later renamed Cadence Industries.

The original imprint, Red Circle Books, was a nod to Goodman's pulps, which were usually identified as "Red Circle Magazines;" the books were originally all sexually-oriented. Almost immediately the imprint changed to Lion Books and the character of the line changed. Eventually, two separately numbered series were issued. The first, which carried no prefixes, issued 233 volumes, from late 1949 to January 1955. All the books were in the short format (like Pocket Books) and all were priced at 25¢. The line started as mostly reprints, but over time original publications came to dominate, accounting for 3/4 of the output over the last two and a half years. In order to hold the price down, the books became steadily shorter, some of them barely qualifying as novels. A second line, originally dubbed Lion Library, began in July 1954. These were in the taller (Signet Books) format and were initially priced at 35¢, with the book numbers having an "LL" prefix. In general, this line aimed for a higher audience, reprinting many prominent literary authors, with a wide variety of fiction and nonfiction. Eventually the new series started including some 25¢ books, some in the old short format, identified only as Lion Books and carrying an "LB" prefix. To avoid ambiguity the books from the second series, in addition to using the prefixes, are herein cited as Lion Library and Lion Books, and the books from the first series as simply Lion.

Martin Goodman was notorious for the large number of corporations he used to publish his various books and magazines. This practice was employed occasionally by other pulp publishers. I've seen two rationales put forth to explain it. One is to limit legal liability: in case of a lawsuit, the amount of damages can be limited to the individual company's financial abilities, and avoid bankrupting one's entire publishing empire. This practice has also been used to avoid paying printers, authors, etc. and in certain circumstances is considered shifty. It has also been suggested that there was an income tax incentive to splitting one's business into smaller pieces. In the days when there were multiple tax brackets with rapidly escalating tax rates, breaking one's income up between smaller companies would keep the tax rates as low as possible. To make this work, the various companies would have different minority shareholders, usually family members, so that the accounting could not be forced to consolidate.

Whatever his rationale, Goodman carried this practice to an extreme. Not only were his magazines published by different companies, the company often changed within the run of a particular title. Note the three companies involved with the initial Red Circle Books. Atlas Mystery, one of Goodman's digest paperback series, changed publishers with each book. For Lion Books, he came up with a new twist. Although all the books were published by Lion Books, Inc. the publishing rights, for both new and reprint books, were often purchased through one of the secondary companies and then licensed to Lion Books. In these cases the books' copyright pages contain an acknowledgement to the secondary company, which can give the impression that a book is a reprint, and has been known to confuse unsuspecting bibliographers. Not all the books were purchased this way but about half of the books seen have such an acknowledgment. The contract for the sale to [Cadence Industries] had an addendum, copies of which have been circulating through comics fandom, that lists 87 companies that were purchased from Goodman, including all the publishing rights still held by them. See Appendix III for a list of 33 companies that are known to have been used in the purchase of Lion Books' inventory.

Lion Books never carried distributors' marks, but an examination of his magazine covers gives a good indication of who Goodman's distributor was at any given time. At the time of Red Circle/Lion Books' inception, Goodman's magazines were being distributed by Kable News. In mid-1952 the K symbol disappeared; it is understood that Goodman began self-distributing his publications at that point. In the November 1956 issue, the American News Trade Journal made a big splash about the fact that ANC was now distributing Goodman's publications. Goodman's timing couldn't have been worse; six months later American News withdrew from the distribution business. Goodman had to scramble to find a new distributor; the one he came up with was IND, which was an affiliate of DC Comics. Comic books were in disrepute at the time and this was apparently the only distributor that would handle them. Unfortunately IND imposed an onerous restriction on the number of comic books Goodman could publish per month and his comic book line went even further into eclipse. It appears that IND was not interested in the paperback line so Lion Books was orphaned; Goodman shut it down after the April 1957 books were distributed.

It is important to note that Lion Books did not go into bankruptcy and was not liquidated. Goodman did try to recoup some of his expenses, however, by selling off the rights to as many books as possible to other paperback houses. This included the rights to books not yet published and even books under contract but not yet written. In various appendices, I have tried to account for the books involved in this sell-off, as best they could be determined from public records.

In their May 27, 1957 issue, Publishers' Weekly printed a "forecast" of books scheduled for publication in May through September 1957, which was prepared before Lion Books shut down. A detailed examination of this forecast turned up 30 titles that Lion Books had in their pipeline for that period. A list of these titles appears here in Appendix I, along with details of their eventual publication, as best they could be traced.

Appendix II details a further 53 books that have been identified as reprints of former Lion Books, resold to other publishers, some published as late as 1961. It may be noted that several of the titles in Appendix I were eventually published by an imprint called Zenith Books. This was a later paperback imprint from Martin Goodman, which ran from July 1958 to June 1960; see the separate Zenith Books index for more information.

It is somewhat puzzling how some former Lion Books were reprinted by companies like Lancer Books and Belmont Books, when no version of those paperback companies existed as far back as 1957. These late reprints suggest that there may have an additional sell-off of Lion Books rights following the demise of Zenith Books in 1960.

In addition to the books listed in Appendix I and Appendix II, there are a few more books that are known, or suspected, to have been in-progress Lion Books, including:

The People Maker by Damon Knight, Zenith Book ZB-14, 1959 ¹

Rumble by Harlan Ellison, Pyramid Book G352, 1958 ²

The Man of Cold Rages by Jordan Park, Pyramid Book G368, 1958

It is also worth noting that Lion's long-running Baseball Stars series was continued by Pyramid Books, albeit with a new editor.

Users of other reference books may notice that Five Who Vanished by Robert J. Levin is often cited as Lion Library # LL175. These references are ultimately repeated from Robert Reginald's Cumulative Paperback Index, where this information first appeared. Mr. Reginald no longer remembers where he got this information but suspects that he inserted it as a "check entry." ³

A notice appeared in Publishers' Weekly (August 5, 1957, p. 32) announcing the sale of Lion Books to New American Library, including the imprint itself and all its publishing rights. It is my understanding that NAL's books were already distributed by IND; this sale may have been forced upon Goodman as a condition of signing with IND. This announcement has been repeated as fact in countless reference books, even though the disposition of Lion's publications, as detailed above, clearly indicates that this sale was never finalized. One can only speculate as to why this deal fell apart, but Goodman's use of secondary companies to acquire Lion Books' inventory may have over-complicated the transfer of rights. The final confirmation that this sale never took place is the inclusion of Lion Books, Inc. on the list of companies that Goodman sold to [Cadence Industries] in 1968.

An interview with Arnold Hano in Paperback Parade #15 provides a behind-the-scenes look at how Lion Books operated in its early days. Hano was apparently hired just after the first books were issued and claims credit for changing the imprint from Red Circle Books to Lion Books. Hano describes in some detail the process whereby many of Lion's original novels were produced. Selected authors would be handed synopses, usually developed by assistant editor James Bryans, of novels the editors would like to see written. This was probably the first time a paperback publisher was proactive in commissioning works from their authors this way. This practice is not common but has been used occasionally since, most prominently by Monarch Books in the 1960s. Hano left Lion Books in 1954 over a salary dispute. Walter Fultz was hired to replace Hano and was probably responsible for developing the Lion Library series. The number of originals dropped seriously; only 30% of the 169 books in the second series were originals and only 15 of those were novels, the majority of the originals being anthologies and humor books.

All together Lion Books published 402 separately numbered books. 172 were original, 169 were reprints and 61 were reissues of previous titles. Including the reissues, there were 326 novels, 21 collections, 14 anthologies and 14 single-topic non-fiction books. 374 books were fiction, broken down by genre as follows: 86 crime and mystery, 72 western, 15 science fiction and fantasy, 16 love novels, 12 war, 9 historical and 3 adventure. There were also 14 humor books and 105 that could be identified as contemporary fiction of one sort or another. There are an additional 31 novels that have not been seen and cannot be classified at this time. 28 books were non-fiction, topics including war (3), true crime (3), biographies (5), sports (7), and sex (3).

Almost all of the Lion Books in both series have stated publication dates. The compiler is somewhat hampered by not having seen that many volumes in the first series. Some number of dates have been found in secondary sources, but there are still many that have not been verified. The publication dates from the copyright registrations have been annotated into the numerical index but these are often a month off from the stated publication dates. A small number of dates have been parenthetically annotated from the forecasts in Publishers' Weekly, when the data was consistent for verified dates in the same time period. Unfortunately Lion Books was spotty in being listed in these forecasts; in some forecasts they don't appear at all and even when they do they are only forecast for a couple months ahead. The accumulated information at hand indicates that Lion Books were often dated for the month after they were actually published, a strategy that allows for longer newsstand display. The patterns of issuance indicate severe fluctuations from month to month, from as little as two to as many as eight books, and there appear to have been several months with no books at all. The monthly output was usually issued in contiguous runs, but there are periods in which some books were issued out of order. They would seem to have been in such a period just before folding, which resulted in 5 numbers not being used. The short-range forecasts in the early years suggests that they were not working that far ahead; the monthly variations suggest that Goodman was having problems getting his books through the pipelines when he was acting as his own distributor.

1 Aldiss, Brian & Harrison, Harry. Hell's Cartographers. New York, Harper & Row, 1975, p 136.

2 Ellison, Harlan. Web of the City. Jove Books, 1975.

3 E-mail from Robert Reginald, November 18, 2012

A number of Lion Books went through multiple printings, but the manner in which they were handled went through three phases. At first, second printings were given new book numbers. Only two books were reprinted this way, both in August 1952. The practice then changed to retaining the book number on later printings. The earliest of such printings known was in April 1953 and the policy continued for some months after the first series died, with one book reprinted as late as November 1955. Starting as early as August 1955 new printings of books from the first series appeared in the second series, with new numbers. Most were also given new covers and many were replated to the larger format. Books whose first printings were in the second series continued the policy of retaining the same book numbers on the later printings. To more fully document these various printing histories I have separately cited all known second and third printings in the Numerical Index. There are probably more.

All the books from December 1949 to August 1950 carried cover artist credits on the back cover. From July 1955 to April 1957 most, but not all, books had a cover credit on the copyright page. Books outside these periods have been identified mostly by signatures, which are extremely sparse. My thanks to Lynn Maguire for help with the credits for her father, Robert Maguire. All 402 Red Circle and Lion Books covers are displayed in the Bookscans database.

Late in production, while data mining the World Wide Web, I became aware of the existence of a published reference book called Lion Books and the Lion Library: a Checklist compiled by Christopher P. Stephens, 1989, which is still available from Amazon.com. I have resisted acquiring a copy, or looking at the sample pages available on Amazon.com, so as to avoid "borrowing" Mr. Stephens' work, even accidentally. It undoubtedly contains information lacking from the present work; anyone looking for additional information on Lion Books will probably find it useful.

This has proven to be the largest and most complex of the Defunct Paperbacks indexes. Aside from the 20+ years spent accumulating the initial data, the immense size and complexity involved in producing and formatting the final index took the better part of two years, during which time new information continued to trickle in. The process of playing "catch-up" with already formatted files added additional opportunities for errors. Certain anomalies, such as the large amount of books with "contents," has strained the format developed for the Numerical Checklist, reducing its readability somewhat. Late in the process Jerry Boyajian proofread various aspects of the formatted index, catching many typos and inconsistencies. I suspect many more still abound. Additional acknowledgement is needed to Bruce Black, who generously went through his Lion Books collection and supplied the publication dates for 85 of the books, as well as many art credits. And finally, the Meritorious Service Award goes to my wife, Kathy Godfrey, who eyeballed her way through the 100+ pages of the "Summer 1957 Book Index" (twice!) to extract the 30 titles that appear in Appendix I. I could not have done this without her.

(Collection, first and only edition. There is a fine line between a book that describes myths and one that retells them. I find myself in agreement with Don D'Amassa's assertion that this book crosses that line into fiction. Thus I have, resignedly, indexed the contents. Although some sub-sections exist among the titles listed below, I have indexed only to the level listed on the contents page.)
