"We wouldn't have questioned if the temple was managed by a private group as it was in the past. But now, it is managed by the state government, and we have the right to make this demand," said V Babu, a resident of Adi Dravida Colony, who led Saturday's protest in Pallavaram. "We don't understand the difficulty in extending the procession to streets just a few hundred meters away," he stated in his complaint to the police. The temple's executive officer, a government employee, proposed halting the temple car procession. However, this suggestion was opposed by caste Hindu groups, specifi cally the Mudaliyars and Naickers, resulting in a deadlock. So, police had asked the district administration to hold peace talks.

THE TIMES OF INDIA, COIMBATORE MONDAY, JULY 22, 2024

To avoid further unrest, Pallavaram Thasildar T. Arumugam met with both groups that a committee would be formed next month to resolve the issue permanently. Starting next year, both groups agreed to form a joint team, including representatives from their communities and government officials, to determine the temple car route one month before the festival.
