

Adirondack Shelter

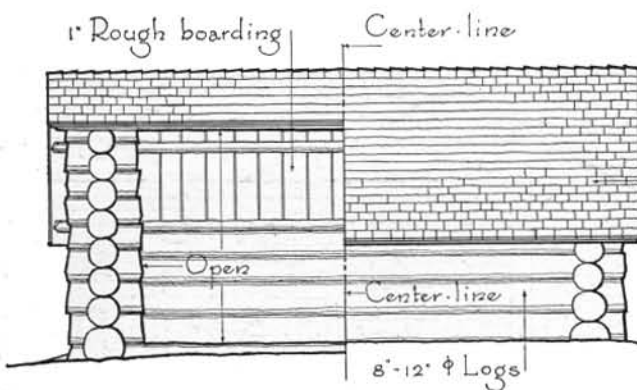

Letchworth State Park - - - - New York

In New York State the Adirondack shelter is a tradition, a survival of the primitive shelter of the earliest woodsmen and hunters of this region. The end and rear walls are tightly built of logs, the front is open to the friendly warmth and light of the campfire. The roof slopes gently to the rear and sharply to the open front to give a protective overhang. The following page shows regional variations in the type as it has moved westward, the second following page depicts its translation into stone.

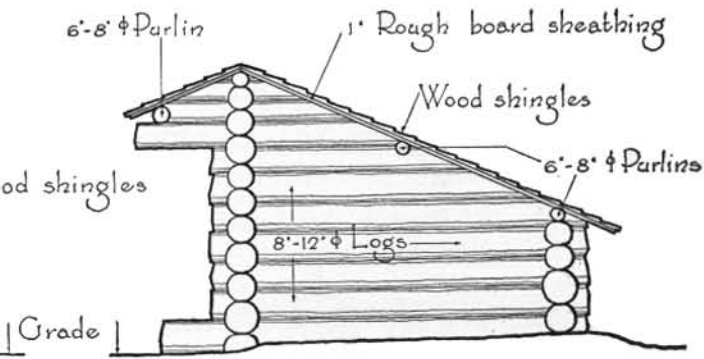

SECTION

HALF FLOOR- & REFLECTED ROOF PLAN

HALF FRONT & REAR ELEVATION

SIDE ELEVATION

Scale $\frac{1}{16}'' = 1'-0''$