

Shelter, Boyle State Park, Arkansas

Vigorous in design and sympathetically executed, this shelter ranks near the top by current standards for park architecture. The broad, unbroken roof surface, vitalized by the texture of thick shakes doubled every fourth course, and the informality of masonry and log work, could hardly be improved on. The outdoor fireplace, with broad stone-paved terrace for its hearth, is a feature of interest. The regular denticulation terminating the vertical boards in the gables forcefully accents the otherwise freehand lines of the building.
