

Cabin, Staunton River State Park, Virginia

The exterior treatment of this cabin is typical of a number of park cabin groups in the Old Dominion—walls of wide boards and squared battens, rough-sawn siding in the gables, and steep roofs. Assuming from the plan that sleeping accommodations in the living room are possible, the “bedding-down” capacity of the cabin is doubtless greater than the one bedroom would indicate.

