

Over the Moon: Birds, Beasts, and Trees-- Celebrating the photographs of Beth Moon

“Aquila”

Edited by Robbi Nester

Table of Contents

Introduction

The Savage Garden

“Trumpet Plant,” Tara Betts

“White Trumpets,” Cati Porter

“In the Veins of the Pitchers,” Mary Alexandra Agner and Peg Duthie

“Sundew,” Tara Betts

“After ‘Savage Garden’,” Janet McCann

Thy Kingdom Come

“Flight of the Raven,” Yahia Lababidi

“Once a Raven,” Robbi Nester

“The Forest of Heaven,” Tim Kahl

“The Sun Will Not Burn You,” Babo Kamel

“Telephone,” Cati Porter

“Listening to the Sky,” Torrin Greathouse

Odin’s Cove

“The Ravens,” Steve Klepetar

“Odin’s Cove,” B.C. Petrakos

“Odin’s Cove #7,” Charles Hood

Augurs and Soothsayers

“Frizzle,” Carol Dorf

“Spitzhauben,” Carol Dorf

“Arucana,” W.F. Lantry

Portraits of Time

"In Love with Trees," CB Follett

"The Remarkable Baobab," Charles Hood

"Baobab Performs Divorce," Sonia Greenfield

"Quiver Tree on Hill (Under Starlight)," Cynthia Anderson

"Quiver Tree on Hill," Todd Mc Carty

"The Crowhurst Yew," Tina Kelley

"The Crowhurst Yew," Tricia Knoll

"Tree Child," CB Follett

"Whittinghame Yew," Juleigh Howard-Hobson

"The Yews of Wakehurst," Steve Klepetar

"To Beth Moon's Photograph, 'The Much Marcle Yew,'" Grace Marie Grafton

"The Linton Yew," Cynthia Anderson

"The Linton Yew," Todd McCarty

"Survivor," Mary McCarthy

"The Queen Elizabeth Oak," Kenneth Pobo

"Avenue of Oaks," Lois P. Jones

"Avenue of Oaks," Robbi Nester

"A Singular Penance," Sonia Greenfield

"The 'Kapok' Girls," Elizabeth Kerlikowske

"Kapok:Mayan Legend Has It," Margo Roby

"Kapok Tarantella," Margo Roby

"King's Canyon," Susan Rogers

"Time Exposure," Lavina Blossom

"Rilke's Bayon," Lois P. Jones

"Lonely Examiner," Tim Kahl

"Rilke's Bayon," W.F. Lantry

"Rilke's Bayon," Susan Rogers

"Rilke's Bayon': Everywhere," Robert Knox

"Ankor Passage," Susan Rogers

“Ankor Passage,” James Penha

“Ankor Passage,” Rick Lupert

“The Strangler Fig,” Krista Moriconi

“Tango Milonguero,” Christina Lovin

“’Lovers’ of a Certain Age,” Elizabeth Kerlikowske

“Intimacy,” Jo Barbara Taylor

“The Lovers,” Helga Kidder

“Majesty,” Elizabeth Kerlikowski

“Majesty,” Todd McCarty

“Snow Hair,” Cindy Bousquet Harris

“Yucca Brevifolia,” Nancy Scott Campbell

Diamond Nights

“The Body as Prayer,” Torrin Greathouse

“Sanctuary,” Marta Ferguson

“Untethered,” J. Lewis

“Diamonds of the Night,” Ellyn Maybe

“To the Oldest Tree,” Mary McCarthy

“Ancient Trees by Starlight,” Mary McCarthy

“Dance,” Christina Lovin

Island of Dragon’s Blood

“Dragon’s Blood Trees,” Robbi Nester

“Shebehon Forest,” W.F. Lantry

“Drinking the Blood of the Dragon Tree,” Noreen Lawlor

“Escape,” Judy Kronenfeld

“Heart of the Dragon,” Heather Bourbeau

“Appropriation,” Judy Kronenfeld

Introduction

Art is a game in the sense that in games, players purposely impose limitations on themselves, rules and boundaries that will make the effort immensely more complex and difficult than it would otherwise have been. For poets, fixed forms or prompts shape the words and even the ideas expressed in the poems in unexpected ways. For photographers like Beth Moon, choosing to use the techniques of 19th century photography seems to have created a similar effect.

On her website, at <http://www.bethmoon.com/Process3.html>, Moon has described the method of making platinum prints, a form she has chosen for many of her photographs. I will not attempt here, with my meager knowledge of the photographic arts, to do justice to the technique, but will say that she has clearly endeavored by choosing this method to apply the same loving attention to an endangered art form that she has to the similarly endangered subjects of so many of her photographs.

An image that might seem merely beautiful in a modern full color photograph of the sort we might see in National Geographic takes on an evocative mystery, a hand-wrought aspect, a step removed from the technological polish modern cameras, with their computerized capacity for automatization, make possible, and this brings the artist back into the picture, reminds us of the work's shaping, the choice of subject, angle, light that went into making the photograph.

It is quite fitting to remind us of the person behind the image rather than endeavoring to present an objective view of the photographic subject, for without our special effort to preserve the ancient trees and plants that so often appear in Moon's work and to remind us of the wonder with which we once viewed the world, we might carelessly obliterate all of it without a thought.

To this choosing and making, ekphrastic poets add another layer of art, creating the palimpsest that is an ekphrastic poem. This process is made all the more complex by the fact that some of these photographs are in themselves products of the ekphrastic art, responding to poetry by Rilke (“Rilke’s Bayon”) or Dylan Thomas. All art arises from other art, but in ekphrasis, this process is laid bare in a particularly self-conscious way.

When I posed this challenge to write about the photographs of Beth Moon to poets in the U.S. and elsewhere, I was hoping for works that spoke of the images in a variety of ways, from relatively straight forward homages to the artist that described the images in detail and interpreted them to reflections on the image that orbit the original like planetary satellites.

The tone of such works can also range from breathless wonder to humor or sharp, critical commentary, and the subject matter varies as well. So one sees in this collection detailed discussions of natural history, philosophical reflection, personal memoir, political commentary, and almost anything else one may care to imagine.

The subjects of the photograph are given voice or are addressed, personified. Writers weave narratives around the images, taking up the mysteries each presents, illuminating them, making them into the substance of a companion work. Or they may muse about the subjects featured in the photograph, inquiring as the original works seem to require of us into the significance, presence, and spirit embodied by these ancient trees, carnivorous plants, fowl domestic and wild, what they have to teach us as human beings in a world we have shaped for our own comfort and convenience almost to the point of rendering it uninhabitable.

I have sought to emphasize this range of responses by organizing the collection in such a way that it clusters together poems that respond to the same photographs. I have also grouped the poems according to which book by Moon the works belong in.

I want to thank Beth Moon for making and disseminating these amazing images and also to thank Cordon Potts Gallery in San Francisco for making some of these images that appear here available to us for use in this anthology.

Thanks also go out to Cati Porter and Judy Kronenfeld, at Poemeleon Poetry Journal, who agreed to host this anthology on their website and also contributed to it themselves. Also thank you Judy and Lavina Blossom for commenting on the draft and on occasional submissions I sent to you.

9

Of course, I must thank the poets whose work makes up the substance of this collection, which could not exist without them. Thank you so much for taking up the challenge, whether your work made it into the final product or not. All of you inspire me.

Sundew

The Savage Garden

<http://bethmoon.com/SavageGarden01.html>

Trumpet Plant

http://www.vervegallery.com/?p=artist\_gallery&a=BM&g=6&r=2

A champagne flute with an odd lid or maybe it is a trumpet with a flat mute that no horn player has ever put to lips, and should never try.

The blood red shot through white and chlorophyll betrays its rich appetite. Hunger that opens into an eager overturned bell mouth.

Slippery filaments lead to drunken slide down where the unheard jazz was smelled, a wooing secretion that digests slowly, a resting note.

Tara Betts

White Trumpets

Inspired by: <http://www.bethmoon.com/SavageGarden04.html>

A pair of them silently mouth words as in a silent film: exaggerated, gaping, almost animated — spectacular, peculiar. They are:

The newly married.

The mid-life models of bad behavior.

The two widowers causing a commotion in the farthest pew of the congregation

The two crones arguing over a lamb shank at the butcher's counter

Their lips are sweet with nectar as they speak their sticky words into the mute camera

And we — we are the fly attracted by their wide mouths, their narcotic smiles, their narrow throats inviting us in to stay awhile.

Cati Porter

Moon photograph title: "Nepenthe Mirabilis"

http://www.vervegallery.com/?p=artist\_gallery&a=BM&g=6&r=2

In the Veins of the Pitchers

The knitting lesson was not a success.
Out from the heart of the sheep, shorn and spun: the lion's roar, a brass throat that called for war, poured excitement and the ferric scent of blood. In the unleashed sound, sleep was no longer two sticks and a skein, brow unstitched.
The student of thread had become a soldier.

What of the bones embossing the hills, what of the drums in the dirt, the desperate beat of hearts at the brink of flight or defeat, the searing of hope into vein-seams, curling corners of quartz?
Civilizations later only the nepenthe mirabilis know how shiny the sharpness, how acidic the soil.

Mary Alexandra Agner and Peg Duthie

SunDew

http://www.vervegallery.com/?p=artist\_gallery&a=BM&g=6&r=2

Darwin loved you above all other protein-hungry plants that feed.
Clear mucus beads like glistening new morning on stalks luring bugs into intoxicating enzymes, sticky and willing to curl themselves around victims. An array of globes stems of light, a constellation of glue that closes around a prey's kicking.

Tara Betts

After "Savage Garden" by Beth Moon

The hypothalamus controls body temperature, hunger, important aspects of parenting and attachment behaviors, thirst, fatigue, sleep, and circadian rhythms. Wikipedia

Something smooth pressing against the hypothalamus

Invades you in the dream,

Seduces your sleeping spirit.

You are swallowed by the forest.

Now you want everything, body and soul.

Your lips move and your arms reach, but Your desire is too deep for satisfaction,

Too complete. Nothing the world has to offer,

Not his hard body or the soft sucking of the baby

Will satisfy you, though you take these in.

Nor will the pinpricks on the black sky.

You will waken astounded

By the transparent blue of the morning,

But still thirsty.

Janet McCann

Thy Kingdom Come

<http://bethmoon.com/TKC00.html>

“Flight of the Raven”

<http://bethmoon.com/TKC07.html>

Flight of the RavenAfter a photograph by Beth Moon*

He knew he must decide between feather and flesh the price of transformation being nothing less than full renunciation of his tattered, old life.

To regain our innocence we must surrender our cherished degree in demonology denounce all intimate familiarity with those wily spirits of destruction.

In our defense against the howling seductive entreaties of the night we might clutch youth's mascots and all our love, fiercely, against our trembling chest.

20

Wings are needed not only to fly, but to keep our balance

Wisdom is becoming innocent, once more

To innocence, all things are permitted...

We can still become who we were.

Yahia Lababidi

Once a Raven

After Beth Moon's photograph, "Flight of the Raven"

In another life, we flew together, sheltered in the boughs of ancient bristlecones, rich with seed.
Our voices rose, loud and raucous.
But that was almost beyond memory.
From the ground, I watch the flocks assemble on the wires, the stunted eucalyptus.
They call to one another in a tongue I no longer understand.

Seeker of bright things, there is only one way back to harmony.
With you at my back, like a quiver, I become a corvid angel, hunting nothing but the sense of flight, intimate with clouds and wind.
My human bones are clumsy, far too heavy for this feat, yet I rise unencumbered on borrowed wings, adept in ways forgotten long ago.

Robbi Nester

The Forest of Heaven

[“Flight of the Raven”]

I carry the raven up the hill with my sister to the edge of The Forest of Heaven. I carry it strapped to my back, to where I commit the memory of flight to dream. I once crossed the sky and saw the village where they still make paper wings by hand. They still bake their bread with blood and the little girls must carry their knives ready to flay the giant hare.
My sister thinks the village is magic, but she is still carrying the raven with me to the edge of The Forest of Heaven, past the river where the miller lives with his wives. If we don't keep moving, we are told we will end up as one of them. We don't bring water. We look for springs along the way. We build a fire only if we can start it with a fallen nest we've found. The song we sing at the end of the day asks the spirit of The Forest of Heaven for guidance. It asks if we were not animals yesterday, if we still linger in them today when we must travel to the old brick cistern built by gnomes and giants working together for once. Their solidarity is rare, but it is legend. My sister and I must be careful not to let each other rest our ravens on the hillock of the damned. From there it is three days more until we reach The Forest of Heaven. When we have reached it, we will have done service to our clan and we may begin our long sad journey back to being human

23 where every day that we are alive we must be fully reminded of everything's presence.

Tim Kahl

“Listening to the Sky”

The Sun Will Not Burn YouAfter Listening to the Sky*

Girl, when you hold the bird to your ear what can she tell you? It will be years before you learn the fables of feathers, the lessons under wings.

Her ancestors are ghazals in your veins.
Each day pulses with their celebrations.
And their failures. Listen: This is birdsong outside of expectation, and its requisite shame.

Hers is a call beyond narrative.
Her beak on your head scarf, her lore against your cheek. This is an offering.
There is no altar. Do not kneel before it.

Babo Kamel

Telephone

Inspired by: "Listening to the Sky," by Beth Moon

She puts the bird to her ear to listen while the dust overcoats her overcoat

Here words sound more like heartbeats the gushing blood and the terror of being held, of wings pressed open involuntarily What she hears is a conversation around loss, that gray flurry of snowdust that covers There is no service in this town so all she hears is the slow stopping of her own heart because that is the small bird and you cannot see the hole in her chest, vested as it is in a life worth getting lost for and for each call a coin is cast. and for each message the meaning turns until what she hears is the hollow echo of what was once meant.

Cati Porter

Listening to the Sky

after "Listening to the Sky," by Beth Moon

I am listening for the sky in the unbeating breast of this beast, this broken sky-piercer, seeker of the dawn, arrow of the long soft dark.

Pressing my flesh, to its flesh, to its bone.
Straining my ear for the rumors of the moon, the secrets of the stars.

Tell me, small wing beat, tiny skyline blur, horizon scar, what do the other sky things whisper while I am asleep?

I feel the unmade bed of its body across my face, wings spread like comfort in a mother's fingers.

My voice is cracked panic as I entreat this missile of jet and cracked riverbank reaching into the clouds.

But it does not speak, no sky remains in its lungs, and I can feel the faultline of its back, spine broken as a taproot.

Torrin Greathouse

Odin's Cove

Odin's Cove #7

Odin's Cove #7

<http://www.bethmoon.com/Odin'sCove07.html>

Wings so black they look green. If a raven hears gunshots, it flies over, happy. Crow-killer, bark-peeler, spike-billed ego river. In the parking lot the raven walks leaning forward, hands back, like a clerk keeping his coattails out of the mud.

Is it true they will eat your dreams down to the fingers?

No, not really, because they would eat those too.

How ravens got so smart:

they open up each other's heads, take out the brains, lick them,

put them back.

Hey Raven, Polar Bear said, while you were away

I made love to your wife.

Raven said, Hey Polar Bear, when you weren't home I ate all the seals you had bidden in the snow.

I found your den and filled it up with shit. Hey Polar Bear, when your wife walks around in circles like she's drunk, ask her who ate both her eyes and then sat on her shoulders laughing.

Watch and wait: if Magpie eats something and doesn't die, drive him off, bogart the rest. A raven knows it will not live forever, but unlike us doesn't complain about it.

Edgar Allen Poe thought he was writing about ravens when it was only some crows. A raven can open a baby abalone with a rock, can open the locked lids of dumpsters, open an account in your name and clean you out faster than a con pulling the world's fastest con job. In Nazi Germany, extermination vans were called Black Ravens.

Who is smarter, people or God? We invented a way to play Mendelssohn on the violin; God invented ravens. Most ravens can speak

English, German, Dutch, Norse—but only to Odin. His names for them:

Thought and Mind. And in Paiute, Ab'-dab.
For the Washo, Kab'-gebk. Shoshone, Hib.

In German, der Rabe. Adjective: rabenschwarz pitch-black, raven-black, black as Ravensbrück.

If like the raven you could be the king of all the murdered people everywhere,

what would you say to their children?

Silly people, I set out lumps of fat for you to eat in the crook arms of birch trees. You spit it out and said it tasted bitter gall. I gave you sunlight and you preferred drain hole and peepshow.

Culverts attract you, iron bars, new ways to kill things. I may eat the dead deer's entrails splayed beside the car-killed carcass, but remember, people, when done, I can fly away.

For you, small and on all fours, where will you go, what black sky will ever take you

back?

Charles Hood

The Ravens

After the photograph Odin's Cove #1 by Beth Moon

<http://www.bethmoon.com/Odin'sCove01.html>

Ravens rest on black volcanic rock where gray sea flows into the horizon of darkening sky. Each has pulled into himself, listening in the caverns of mind to the god's call.
There is no good news to carry home.
Valkyrie have busied themselves over bleeding earth. Raven eyes have seen beating wings, horses mad and wild, snorting their steamy breath over a hundred fields where men fight and groan and die. Women watch fires burn all night, too many bodies for grave mounds or graceful ships filled with gold and gear, too many starving children, too many angry dogs. The ravens rustle black wings and rise, seeking currents that will carry them back to the tree and the god with a single eye, blinded with smoky tears.

Steve Klepetar

*Hugin and Munin fly each day over the spacious earth.
I fear for Hugin, that he come not back, yet more anxious am I for Munin* Grímnismál

Odin's Cove

Mind and Memory fly the end is here not near but here the machine goes on but Mind and Memory will not return not this time not ever Fear realized strong men shuffle there is no regret in this now there is peace for some stillness and simplicity others fight till they understand the ravens will not return Mind and Memory gone in this hateful now

B.C. Petrakos

Augurs and Soothsayers

<http://bethmoon.com/Augurs00.html>

Frizzle

"Frizzle"

<http://www.bethmoon.com/Augurs017.html>

When you look another creature in the eye even if the creature is a chicken with a serious beak, you expect that conversation is possible. You want to be helpful, to smooth the ruffled feathers. We believe the language of chickens limited to excitement, to fear, but perhaps their steps through the dusty yard map out a journey?

Bees, after all, return to the hive with directions for the colony, and even ants mark their trails for the legions to follow.

Why not these round eyed creatures, who would have much to say, if we could decipher their gestural language?

Carol Dorf

"Spitzhauben"*<http://www.bethmoon.com/Augurs002.html>

There is something to be said for a chicken with a feathered top knot. Already, before proceeding to the spotted breast, you know this is a fowl to be reckoned with, intolerant of excessive handling. Although you can be assured of three eggs more or less a week, she will not accept confinement flying off to roost in the trees.

At night, when the raccoons and coyotes are out, well then, perhaps she will negotiate.

Carol Dorf

Arucana

<http://www.bethmoon.com/Augurs003.html>

Among our Australorps and Orpingtons, beside the Speckled Sussex and the Black Cuckoo Marans, four Arucanas thrive, their sharp clawed feet scratching the upturned earth for any caterpillar still alive or any buried grub they may attack in unison. Excited voices throng with each new find: a predatory song well understood by every other hen in earshot. If they find a coiled snake, they'll crowd around, calling for all they're worth the warning cry, until a couple take the first bites from its flesh, and then again the whole flock falls upon this newest prize.

The ravaged scales coil in surprise, in vain. It's soon consumed. A tug of war breaks out over torn fragments of its skin.
Savage? Perhaps. But chickens, from their birth, are like young dinosaurs confined within those tufts of feathers, beautiful before you get to know the way their nature runs.

W.F. Lantry

Portraits of Time

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood00.html>

In Love with Trees

I am in love with trees I know it sounds daft
I can't help it I love the stability of them their to and sway I love their general health the outward persona that keeps council of inner griefs

I like how they resist the crack of winds the bleach of sun Even blighted ponderosa and beetled lodgepole where the sap comes out red and cruciform instead of honeyed taffy even then as bells toll in browned needles they retain an erect dignity.

I want to hold them tell them my regret at drinking their birth right at fouling the air we share breaking their resistance

They ask nothing of me stand noble as kings along the ridge branches touching or not birds coming or not

I love them for their stance and for never forgetting to reach upward

CB Follett

The Remarkable Baobab

Beth Moon, Avenue of the Baobabs, <http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood11.html>

The remarkable baobab comes in two types: fat bottle and skinny bottle. The remarkable baobab can make you pregnant—lean against it at your own risk. The remarkable baobab comes in nine types: the African type, the Australian type, six Madagascar types, and a type that only grows on the moon. No, that is a lie. There are three kinds on the moon.

The remarkable baobab has been a bar, a church, a jail, a post office, a hunting blind, a boundary marker, a dance hall, a water tank, and an authorized station to observe the transit of Venus. This one, here, touch it—it is a thousand years old. Let's carve our names in the pink part.

The remarkable baobab has roots that reach into the earth for many miles. This root is the water root and sometimes fish get caught by it, get lifted all the way to the crown of the tree, blinking and shivering in the windy light. Other roots move the rocks around, put them on the path in different patterns. This root likes to wander just below the surface, teasing the grass. This root is the deepest root; it grows not in soil but reaches all the way down into diamonds.

Noah knew the remarkable baobab: it was the first tree he could see, rising out of the water as the Flood receded. Ravens sat in it, laughing. Baobab wood cures snakebites. A girl who got pregnant by a baobab was going to be beaten by her father. Tell me who did this, he said. The tree, the tree, she told him, it is not my fault, it was the tree. He did not entirely believe her but the father went to the tree to demand bride price. He did not get it, but in berating the tree he leaned too close. He become pregnant himself and had to run away to Kinshasa in shame.

After we die my friends and I agree to meet at the Leydsdorp Baobab, next to President. First we shake hands, look at our feet, say, Oh, it happened to you too? But then we need to make some plans. Things need to happen: we can't just stand here all day. My friends want to invite Thomas Aquinas for dinner, but I am not so sure. What about something a little more over-the-counter to start with, maybe LBJ or Elvis? Instead of flowers we could have glowing jars of sea monkeys, and give ant farms as presents. The waitresses all could have big hair. When I try to talk about my idea they make rude noises, look at me like I always park facing the wrong side of the road. This is why nobody likes you, they say. Well, you know what, I tell them, there are more baobabs than just this one. You guys just piss me off.

I put my ant farm (still wrapped in nice paper) in a backpack, grab two bottles of Aqua Fina and some crackers, take a compass bearing for due north, and start walking.

Charles Hood

Baobab Performs Divorce

– after Beth Moon’s photo “The Chapman’s Baobab”–

The art and artist are one in slow-moving sculptures meant to mock our clownish distress, like some halved baobab posing in a posture of leaving, of what we call growing apart.

In its picky fingers the divided music collections, the photos neatly torn in half, the Shih Tzu shared every other week until a custody battle awarded the surrogate baby to the better half. See the scorned wife’s things balled up in tightly wound collections of hate. See the husband’s rightful shit all bound up in little parcels of resentment, each heavy trunk lethargic with age and a little overweight, like retirees who come to realize they never made love with the lover they only fucked then married, except now they’re well past prime, so they strain to go separate ways, but a long history binds them at the roots. They reconcile, stay, and lean away from their partner’s place.

Sonia Greenfield

Quiver Tree on Hill

The days drag by in blinding

heat, but only dusk knows the wonder

of scattered starlight.

How
night makes this scarred tree sigh like a song

that slowly skiffs

in the silvery blue.

Standing
silently is a form

of prayer,

and some trees offer no shade, but persist

like a riddle.
No one replies, but the fading stars

sigh.

Todd McCarty

Quiver Tree on Hill (under Starlight)

In my life, there's no such thing as darkness. All night I swim in light, more light than you can see, from stars who love me as I love them—completely, without question. We reach, touch, fall into each other—we are quiver and arrow, water and thirst. When my time on earth is done, I'll return to my first home—stripped of leaves and branches, speeding toward a wormhole.

Cynthia Anderson

“Crowhurst Yew”

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood18.html>

The Crowhurst Yew

Oldest trees in cemeteries, thousand years old, signs of immortality, of death. They root in the cadaver's mouth, drawing souls, through transpiration, skyward.

In French, it's "if," a tree that grows too slow to die, deco line, intertwining thigh, lumpengargoyle, golem's yawn, and behind that door, a circle bench for twelve, a table, gouged-out room, black as ear-plug silence. The cell slams shut.

Tina Kelley

The Crowhurst Yew

Once I knew it well.
Water sang.
Clouds flew on wings.
Trees had doors.

Then I forgot.
Radios and CDs.
Crows on power lines.
Push buttons.

Maybe it's the dimming of my eyes, the dulling of my teeth, how my feet ache. Being all alone.

I turn to simple ways, knock on that ill-hung door, open inward to the yew, sit dark where roots splay, and ask you, come back from the bone yard.

Beside me, ghost man, in the yew love this day.

Tricia Knoll

Tree-child

In some tribes, infants who died were thought to have been cheated of life. They were buried inside a tree in order to share its living.

Wombed cold in a cavity of Black Cottonwood a child too young to catch a loose soul from the wind, you were given to the secrets of trees, sealed with tendrils and rough bark, to take your living moments from wood, to gain moisture and the small company of beetles, to hear the sap as it courses along cambium rivers, those tunnels near your left ear that carry tomorrow from deep drinking roots up along your sheltered body to the knuckled joints of branches.

Long ago your flesh fell prey to the mandibles of scavenging things, and cold, and high winds flayed your past from you, leaving alabaster bones doubled in a Q, in the polished hollow of this tree.
The furrowed trunk closed round, carrying bits of you upward toward resinous buds.

Someday, long from now, when your hollow weakens the tree beyond standing, when it breaks at the knees, where you lie curled in quiet, then will your old bones fall out into leaf rustles and you will be seen again, a clutter of bone parts, no longer connected but reluctant to let go.

CB Follett

Whittinghame Yew

I am more of sinewed bark than furling Leaf. I turn and return myself into and Out of my own ancient limbs, trunk burling Beneath the weight of all the years I can Recall. I am all that I remember:
I am bird nests built within the spring green Curtains that my branches made in former Times. I am another day's unforeseen Tragedy as all the woods I was so Much a part of fell to flame. I survived.
I am roots set a thousand years ago.
I am low limbs chopped by men not alive Anymore. I am age old memories Of years held in branches, turned a part of me.

Juleigh Howard-Hobson

The Yews of Wakehurst

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood16.html>

After the photograph by Beth Moon

The yews of Wakehurst sleep on mossy mounds at the edge of a deep forest cut waiting for the world to weave visionary light through tubular roots.

The yews wait with the patience of trees, the pull of water through roots that penetrate seven worlds, and the silence of ancient, interlocking wills. Do not come in darkness, stay clear of the webs of dream.

If you approach before sunset, tread with care, holding the grace of your own quiet thoughts as your breath mingles with theirs, and waters of your blood surge with the moon pull of watchers whose flesh is air and fire and earth.

Steve Klepetar

To Beth Moon's photograph "The Much Marcle Yew"

A tree must be old to be empty.

What stays in the undemanding center?

Year after year stretching the outer further out, the heartwood slowly dying, all that must be released, as though space itself were necessary to help the tree claim its place in the world.

What lives there? Humans come, step inside.

Do they sit on the bench they've brought and tucked into the hollow? Do they hear in their minds the tune that soothes them?

There's room for all the thoughts in the world, there's room for the meanings of words.

Do parents bring their children and tell them, "Duck in here and feel how air can hold you"?
Of course they do.

Grace Marie Grafton

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood17.html>

The Linton Yew

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood41.html>

You have lived so long, only the stars remember what you know—the families of trees who fell before you, processions of animals and insects and birds, and humans with their strange church of stone—you bore witness to them all and replied with leaves, your canopy expanding as your body hollowed and began to fail. The sky intervened, helped you send down a root from your crown, guide it deep into earth to form a new trunk—now firm at the heart of gnarled and twisted time, shards of sun-dappled bole splayed like scallop-shells around your revival.

Cynthia Anderson

The Linton Yew

Time
carves

the best of us into gnarled planks bowing against the weather.

Pray
for sun & stars relentlessly silver.

Pray
we keep standing

despite the hollows within.

Let such stubbornness

be beautiful, necessary to remain upright.

Let this hill gather the world as each leaf drifts downward, littering

the grass

55 with undone.

Pray it is enough to simply remain

standing.

Todd McCarty

“Queen Elizabeth Oak”

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood22.htm>

Survivor

Riven, your trunk curls around a dark hollow-- somewhere to take shelter to share with you dreams older than all the time we can remember.
For you, we are but a brief flicker, a blink so recent we sound but one short note in your long symphony, the one you are still writing-- each word a layer of new wood, each breath a leaf, reaching for light.
The great cave of your trunk stands as signature to a bargain struck years ago-- refusing a simple death broken open knotted and scarred, yet still returning,
bud and branch, alive, each season a phrase in your ancient conversation with stone and sun and the subtle whisper of light from distant stars.

Mary McCarthy

THE QUEEN ELIZABETH OAK

It must have been chilly sitting on a throne, no central heating, plots that freeze on your skin. Perhaps you expected even an oak to bow. Even the sun can't cajole one to tilt the knee. Your people called you Gloriana.

No one is Gloriana.

Wind gets in our bones and we think we'll never warm up. You wore much make-up, had many jewels. No oak needs those,
a scepter trunk, roots that tunnel deeply, grip ground.

A thousand years pass like a single cloud.

Kenneth Pobo

Avenue of Oaks

After Joseph Fasano

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood21.html>

You sit by the road and watch your shadow cross the grove of oaks away from you.

The moon dappling you into someone you no longer know. Like the simple cell multiplied      like rain      like mercury.

Your hands heavy with pails of moonlight; a white fire you fling into the night for an answer. How you wondered why this illness came to you and whether you will continue or if even now some dark bird is repeating in you its malignant fugue. You've been carrying the body so long. Sometimes you want to lose it like a dark country even though you'll have to return, even though memory will ice and crack its way through. No one could look at infinity all at once, just as there is no one to hear every prayer, but there is a presence who watches and grows near you like these trees, stout and florid faced. God is the stranger you want to hold in your arms. Your desire for solitude a delicious fruit. Maybe you need a lifetime without a body to consider the word open or the phrase it is late for blessings. You've thought of the way you could be carried without form. The way wind urges tumbleweed. How it works in you like a thirst to touch the living. Death is the razor call of the crow in these oaks. Then the wind, if you are lucky, and its forgiving song.

60

Lois P. Jones

A Singular Penance

—Triggered by Moon's "Bowthorpe Oak"

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood32.html>

As if the act wasn't enough—the taking children out of school to see it, the posses built of the dispossessed, the jeering, the rope, the guns, the flies, the fomenting heat of a sickly summer—postcards were made and sold, as if cruelty was worth commemorating, yours to keep for a nickel.

At the center is the ancient oak coerced into something it must want no part of, the weight of its burden heavy anyway where it hangs from a lower-most limb as men pose next to what their ruined hands wrought, each wearing their best straw hats.

After walking the horses away and cleanup, a son cut from the limb and buried, an image branded on the eyes of his mother, the tree persists as they do when they are allowed to,

and that region's history becomes sealed

62 in a time capsule, the tree's ring of a year's events, neither close to the scarred bark nor fresh with new growth buried deep. Just there in the middling quiet, easily forgotten.

Sonia Greenfield

“Kapok”

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood06.html>

The “Kapok” Girls

Three sisters rush into the clearing from three, seven, eleven, arms and hair flying, chins up preparing for the collision that secures their futures together. The jolt is not painful as we might think but metamorphic. Together a larger version of themselves roots, individual skirts polished by wind still frozen in their final flourish. Faces hidden in conversation but limbs stretched toward birds in an ecstasy of wonder. This was generations ago, and they are still talking. We hear them when the wind is from the west.

Elizabeth Kerlikowske

Kapok: Mayan Legend Has It the souls of the dead climb the old kapok - use its branches

as highways reaching toward Heaven - perch, waiting.

Margo Roby

Kapok Tarantella

Hers is an aging beauty, the trunk expanded to its final diameter, as the old kapok settles into place -- much like an elderly elephant - she has lived out centuries.

Buttressed roots surround her, swirl like a taffeta skirt. Her arms still lift, spread in a final tarantella.

Margo Roby

67

KING'S CANYON

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood39.html>

the sky is the floor

I hear them tell me, "look up" rise and be as gods

Susan Rogers

“Rilke’s Bayon”

Time Exposure

Of course it started small.

A seed fell or was blown into a fissure, or perhaps was left by a jungle bird in a bit of dung. Rain fell, the sun shone, and delicate roots gripped tight, stretched down, grew long and thick as they found soil. The trunk rose, twisted and stretched high in a dancer's pose above these terraced stones of Angkor Wat.

Tetrameles nudiflora, a designation for all such trees with shared general traits. But this is a photograph, a portrait of one tree that holds its limbs high against a roiling sky as it perches on the ruins of the largest religious monument in the world.
Beth Moon calls her captured moment-- and I think she is naming much more than the tree—"Rilke's Bayon," after a poem about the transience of walls and cities, about the fact that a dark forest one day removes all names.

We know this, but here is a little more reason for humility. A tree weathered centuries of shifting climate, grew slowly and quietly over stones placed by human hands to form a temple. And yet, if we could acknowledge it, neither was ever separate from its surroundings, ever apart from the dark forest (if you would call it that, ignoring light through the canopy), 70 from which all living things arise and into which they fall.

Lavina Blossom

Rilke's Bayon

When your roots, thick as the legs of a Dong Tao chicken reached down into the earth. When your body twisted up and took over the stones of a crumbling temple in an attempt to survive. When the world wanted to displace you. When the water made its journey and did not return. When you knew your prayers would only fall without ripening. Only then, when the wind slashed your waist and you called out to the stars. An answer. In you, who were a child once— in you.

Lois P. Jones

Lonely Examiner

after Beth Moon "Rilke's Bayon"

When hands are withdrawn and dust survives, the soft light creeps in with the rains. Paradise turns to mud, but that is no concern to the green eye framing the rich narrative of the strangler fig.
It wriggles its way into the heart of the temple.
Its grip alarms the escapist's gaze as it squeezes the doors. The roof is returned to the ground.
Then the souls of the high priests are gone.

When hands are withdrawn and dirt resides inside
The Hall of Dancers, the earth will take up its claim.
The temple can't wear down the jungle's nerves.
The rains come, but they can't rinse away the green eye's frame. The strangler fig is careful without a care, rising up into the registers of strangeness. It is an antenna calling for awe to humble its viewers.
No human can be its muse, just its lonely examiner.

Tim Kahl

Rilke's Bayon

Each sandstone block, transported, carved by hand, fits carefully against the next, recalls the mason's skill through centuries of loss, but through cleft crevices, the coiling root, now serpentine, seeks water, sprawls across the careful ashlar of these mitered walls, running along the overhanging tiers, until it finds a seam, and disappears somewhere within. In unison, they hold the swelling trunk against the monsoon storm, against the cloudburst lightning bolts that shoot their branched patterns a moment and reform themselves within the images foretold, within the carvings of these stone reliefs, as if the earth mirrored itself, motifs echoed in sky and stone, in wood and bark, structures remade across the centuries, and every emulated attribute, each mimicked parallel and each reprise, balanced, seems time's relentless countermark, one we can quickly read and understand.

W.F. Lantry

Rilke's Bayon

Who is to say when a thing is done, a life, a path, a portrait?
Each has a journey that ends somewhere, even though like love each may begin again, somewhere else.

We are each like trees.
We carry our living core inside as we grow outward and upward into branches of being. No matter how we move in the wind or how full of fruit we become, our essence remains the same.

Rilke, you are tree and maker of trees. You are spirit and you are form.
And even now that you are growing on some unseen path, painting word portraits I cannot know, I do know that you have signed this tree, this journey, this life and you are beginning again, somewhere else.

Susan Rogers

“Rilke's Bayon”: Everywhere

Our roots seek everywhere as well circling a city, a place of birth, a world of ancestors, the brown lands of childhood parks the el train station where the grandfather I never knew opened his "tea room" before fate emerged from behind the blameless trees Is that my Bayon temple, crumbling among those history-hiding trees?
 Flushing, Queens County, the still-striving city the looming towers with their roots in Manhattan schist our temple complex, both climbing and crumbling in the postwar bloom of the one essential empire?

What may be said of us after we have seen the stony monuments of Angkor?
 Sky-topping New York? Paris with its horizontal temples stretching down the regal avenues?
 Yet everywhere the trees find their place Leaves live on air Roots grow rivers between knees of piled stones making places where there are no places moving like the many-legged monsters of cinema dreams slow mo-ed to ravishing millimeters, vital penetration

They embrace us, trees of our millennia, with their tangled love Grow upon the tablets of arching history carry our roots to the ongoing sky crumble our cities to a smear on an archeologist's hungry screen walk upon the earth like stationary Sauria from another eon in the wrinkled earth stepping from glacial outwash to the greenhouse glare of day

At the bottom of things as they appear to be lies a dream of tiny mouths crumbling biota with cellular teeth, in the rain forest of the hidden self

The seer embraces them, timeless trees, root and twig lays his face against their pitted skin crawls out upon limbs plumbs their roots reading there, as the tree reads us, the thousand blessings of Bayon its ranked bulbs and demon faces its prayer wheels turned to stone

Distilling men and their passing marvels, the ficus performs its age-old alchemy, waving the earth to gladden sky

“Ankor Passage”

<http://www.bethmoon.com/TouchWood02.html>

"ANKOR PASSAGE"for Beth Moon*

In the overgrown hours between sleep and waking your image poured into my dreaming unrecognized and yet familiar a tree with giant roots descending.
 Its trunk a living, massive dragon ending in a curving claw.
 The twisted roots reaching full across blackened stone engulfed an ornamental façade constraining ancient temple walls with wooden ropes, the "shimenawa" of a Khmer shrine. From its chest the mammoth trunk branched an emaciated arm with half-closed hand, elongated fingers, a delicate, ash grey thumb.
 There was no proof of a dragon's head or fire, only signs of sinking. The tangled roots fallen on weathered stone, sunk into my deepening breath, some cellular memory, interior of bone, the sap inside me rising.

This morning I felt a gentle pull, as if from some unknown anchor.
 An image surfaced suddenly, sparking from last night's dream: Hikaru Kinenkan, in Takayama, Japan, the museum of art and ancient history.
 I saw Koryu the golden dragon hovering above a white stone roof.
 Startled, I recognized the Khmer temple and museum were the same design.
 It was as if the pattern of one had given rise to the blueprint of the other, or two timelines had somehow joined.
 But the museum I saw was in bright color, the dragon was no longer wood, but light.

There were no binding ropes to seal her.
 The doors were open to all.
 I entered there and walked the passage designed like a tunnel lit in gold.
 I read on the gallery wall:
The origin of the world is one.
The origin of humankind is one.
The origin of all religions is one.

In the museum courtyard I stopped before the tree they call "Space Cherry," grown from a seed which had journeyed into space.
 It was one of only a few such seeds that had returned to earth and flowered.
 Thinking about its passage from ground to sky, then the return from sky to ground, its history 79 of ascending and descending, I bowed.

Susan Rogers

Ankor Passage

Nature is a dragon fearless of monuments mere humans build;
it waits to scale abandoned temples crumbling in its grip.

James Penha

Ankor Passage

after the photo by Beth Moon

You can make a building but the Earth doesn't care.

Rick Lupert

The Strangler Fig

<http://bethmoon.com/TouchWood15.html>

It is still the same, my life.

—Rainer Maria Rilke

Again and again, the sound of bones breaking—the mind summoning that memory of pried-apart metal, the long spine board, a twice-shocked heart.

The day my face became a five-beer happy-hour road map of a drunk driver pushing sixty around a rain-slick curve.

The year of the fire tiger and the barren fig tree, I am knife-cut and carved in the surgeon's amphitheater, pumped full of strangers' blood.

That moment I became Rilke's lady in the liquid-clear mirror, full of mistrust—hundreds of stitches tugging at flesh to close the infinite line segment of torso and mouth.

This is what I see when you offer your portraits of time, my body the temple crumbling slowly beneath the weight of a tree.

I hear the rumble and crack of the strangler fig's roots splitting open stone pillars and walls, the pity-sigh of two hundred faces looking on.

History whispers to my future that this will define me, and yet, and yet, I answer in the relentless bloom of foliage, the twice-bearing of fruit.

Kristina Moriconi

“The Lovers”

Tango Milonguero

“We dance tango because we have secrets.” Marilyn Cole Lownes

They lean in, bending an apilado— mutual axis united in passion.

Her limb lightly skims his leathered skin—a caricia of long-time amor.

Petrified parada—breathless standstill that keeps secrets, revealing naught but grace.

Inspired by “The Lovers” from Portraits of Time by Beth Moon

Christina Lovin

Tango milonguero Tango in which partners stay closely embraced

Apilado The dancers lean in towards each other and share an axis throughout the dance.

Caricia One of the dancers runs their foot up the outside edge of their partner’s leg, usually during a parada.

Parada Brought to a standstill, often with both dancers bending their knees and dipping down.

“Lovers” of a Certain Age

Baucis, Philemon

old temple keepers

the moon knock at the door unending kindnesses from hosts guests who might be gods one wish that they die together having lived for so long as one another loaf, more wine thank yous, goodbyes years pass

Philemon's breath collapsed he touched his chest bark, fingertips leaves,

Baucis rooted, climbing into his arms forever intertwined again the gods were kind

Elizabeth Kerlikowske

INTIMACY

the lovers
woven close faces gaze in opposite directions a sliver of space between their cheeks one loops like a knit stitch right arm high grounding balance curls encircle his head like a crochet cap the partner S-curve in the back left arm raised to the sky their palms meld in the clouds hair ruffles on her shoulders a Nippon silk shawl voyeur

I steal away on the murmur of fallen leaves

Jo Barbara Taylor

The Lovers

- by Beth Moon

I've not seen trees in love before, but these two -

They met in kindergarten, grew into each other's arms, learned to winter ice and snow.

Their limbs danced in the wind as together they leaved a mansion, fed birds and squirrels.

For decades their leaves blushed in fall sun, bared branches, yet they cling to each other.

They believe in the same root.

Helga Kidder

“Majesty”

Majesty

Your hull muscles its way into the forest, the 1% of you that's still alive.

Your eyes are not empty. A squirrel pops his head out, he's your pupil.

I'm your pupil. By your vigor, how you've welcomed the sun, a history of seasons in your skin. Your great gape offers shelter to wrens, bats, children's offerings—such resonance in your hollow, orisons and sighs.

Your mouth sweetly mossy with songs; your limbs full of dare and possibility and your hair, OMG, your hair!

Elizabeth Kerlikowske

Snow Hair

After Beth Moon's photograph of the tree, Majesty

Owl face opens, its voice a slow trawl through foggy inlets, slivers of ice memory, snow hair's ancient beauty new each season of melt, moon braille carved on nights of wind howl, by pelting rain and the fingers of God; snow hair les cheveux de la niege, new each throng of sedge warblers, when bees let honey ooze a sweet-mask down the trunk – fluent in languages of soil and time, shrinks, stretches, swells, weathers the languid carousel of stars, el cabello de la nieve, new each ancient spring.

Cindy Bousquet Harris

Majesty

Time
makes us more than we can imagine.

Does not diminish the inward flame, but makes majesty of gnarled and knotted skin.

Take this tree simmering

in sunlight, a brutal silver the vaulting leaves above.

An oblong gap in the trunk large enough for a slender

woman to sit.

No wind to forgive time bustling by.

A broken branch shagged with autumn

in the green fuzz below.

Words fell away long ago.

93

What was worth saving now lost in a prayer of rain.

Todd McCarty

Yucca Brevifolia, Joshua Tree

https://issuu.com/misha1/docs/ancienttrees\_sample\_pps\_flip

A desert moth floats unharmed among yucca most spiked of lilies. How intimate is this shaggy forest with survival; for instance, Joshua stores water in his trunk. And on occasion his bristly arms offer bulky cream blooms soft scent of smoke. Here, the yucca-moth busy with pollen, lays her own eggs. Too many?

the Joshua can abort ovaries. And imagine—his prayer reaches to clouds heaped in dense blue.

Come dusk, the bright billows darken, drop rain through the spun out distance between us, plant and human.

Nancy Scott Campbell

Diamond Nights

<http://bethmoon.com/DiamondNights.html>

Lyra

The Body as a Prayer

after Lyra by Beth Moon & "Lift Yr. Skinny Fists, Like Antennas to Heaven..." by Godspeed You! Black Emperor

<http://bethmoon.com/DN012.html>

Lord,
tonight my bones are filled with wonder.
You have bled out the sky & filled its corpse with sparks.

Tonight the ceiling is on fire, you have stolen all that is quiet & tender in the dark.

You have chewed on diamonds & spilled them across the table a procession of brilliant crumbs.

And Lord,
these hands, they are hungry.
I have lifted them up into the black all broken, a dozen fingers on each.

They are hungry to be swallowed whole, to be carried into the air to grow into your embrace, to break their cores against the fishbowl sky, picking at stars like lyre strings wondering which will be the first to snap.

Lord,

you have made a meal of the nights & I am lifting myself up to you slender wooden fists all my tumbling bones.

I have lifted my entire body as a prayer.

My skin is an open mouth.

Feed me your light.

Torrin Greathouse

Sanctuary

after Beth Moon's "Ara" from Diamond Nights

<http://bethmoon.com/DN01.html>

A reverence for baobabs makes sense.

Apart from fruit, there's size and age, a shape beyond human writ large, writ long. And here, beneath Ara, the star altar that tells a tale of unity among the gods, these trees, roots intertwined, star-struck branches enmeshed, mirror community, signal a place of sustenance, shelter, water.

This grove oasis, made sacred by need, humble altar of thanks made so by all who amble through its shade, enjoy its fruit, gnaw, famished, through its bark to softer wood.

Crossroads of wild things, of stones and stars, its trees sentries of centuries. Amen.

Marta Ferguson

untethered thoughts on Beth Moon's "Volans"

<http://bethmoon.com/DN013.html>

deep run our roots into the sanded plains seeking, piercing the veins the arteries of earth pulsing with hydration solid as rock our bodies from thinnest infant sapling to massive wooden mammaries that nurture each year's meager-leafed bonnet unmoved by wind by time but in the night, what dreams! branches morph to wings as drunk with starlight we rise from earth to moon beyond, if dawn delays

j.lewis

Diamonds of the Night

This tree looks like a woman trying to hold up the sky.
Nature is above our head like a disco ball tilting forward and back.
Like an everlasting dance illuminating our stories through eternity.

Ellyn Maybe

Response to Beth Moon's Diamond Nights "Octans"

<http://bethmoon.com/DN08.html>

To the Oldest Tree

Your thoughts are long stored in root and cell.
They begin before there were cities before Egypt before the earliest of our many kings.
You have seen the stars move in their slow procession through the houses of the sky.
You wear them netted in your branches like a crown.
You pull me into your silence where there is room enough to spin out all the dreams and tell all the stories of our small lives, to remember those first dreamers, who came with visions of fire and brash ambitions, laying stone on stone to rebuild the world in the image of desire.
You did not build.
You grew, root and branch a library of living cells the tides of life responding to the pull of distant galaxies, the languages of light and gravity spelled in the patterns of your secret heart.

Mary McCarthy

Response to Beth Moon's Diamond Nights "Andromeda"
<http://bethmoon.com/DN07.html>

Ancient Trees by Starlight

We live too fast to see your slow waltz your finest branches reaching out like a web of nerves, sensitive as the fingertips of the blind, reading messages written in the light of distant galaxies.
We are like children drowsing beneath the hum of grown ups' conversation, knowing only something more than we can apprehend sings between the maze of roots and the spill of starlight through your limbs.
And so we stand suspended, incidental to the long dance whose rhythms we can barely sense as you turn with the earth in the starry arms of Andromeda.

Mary McCarthy

Dance

after Beth Moon's "Vela"
<http://bethmoon.com/DN03.html>

Oh no, we are not too old, my love.
Dance with me beneath the night sky—our arms abandoned to the music of a million stars. Our hair riotous and untamed as in our youth, the tendrils entangled with evening dew. Press against me as if we were saplings—supple once more—our limbs free to touch, enfold, then pull away, not this rigid girth set so firmly aground.
We are ancient. These roots we share go deep.
But oh, our wild, wild branches!

Christina Lovin

Island of Dragon's Blood

<http://bethmoon.com/DBlood00.html>

“Shebehon Forest”

Dragon's-Blood Trees

After a photograph by Beth Moon, "Shebehon Forest"

In a dream they once appeared to me, upright as shaving brushes, the dragon's-blood trees of Socotra Island, off the Horn of Africa, and here they are again, silver as shadows, exposing their undersides, a tangle of arterial branches like the gills of gigantic mushrooms or the intricate crinoline skirts of girls tumbling immodestly onto the grass.
They could be sentient if sessile beings from another world, but in fact, they are as earthly as we are, an everyday part of life for the Socotrans, though they seem odd to us.
I have heard their red sap serves as a medicine, a dye, a powerful potion-- altogether too useful for their own good.

Robbi Nester

Shebehon Forest

Based on the Beth Moon photo found here: <http://www.bethmoon.com/DBlood008.html>

The dragon's blood flows slowly from old scars, gathered in drops, like tears grown crystalline, crimson for conjuring. Enchantments need dualities: precise configured words and earthly wonders: trees that seem to bleed, whose interwoven branches redesign our deep conceptions of an ancient past still with us now, their patterns unsurpassed by any crafted loom. Note how the long stems halve and twist, dividing into pairs, and how their buttressed shelter overgirds the limestone roots, whose jagged soil bears no other leaves. What antique cradlesong could have been sung among these trunks to call on river gods to quench the firefall: sunlight reflecting from the garnet-red bright surfaces, burnished until they gleam like dragon scales, divided into thirds as if the landscape of a primal dream composed of forking rhythms overhead could be remade beneath these tropic stars?

W.F. Lantry

Drinking the Dragon's Blood

After Beth Moon's "Shade of the Dragon's Blood Tree"

I slit the trunk press my mouth against rough bark suckle like a babe gulp in the warmth taste the ripeness of sand tartness of pomegranate sanguis sanguinis mei sap of my veins flowing into dust rooted through millennia seeking hidden aquifers quench my parched undying thirst

five hundred years of barren dreams tinkle of goat's bells small hoofs kick dry grass bleat of early morning I rise to greet the mist my head a mass of tangled limbs and prayers

Noreen Lawlor

“Heart of the Dragon”

Escape

Beth Moon, "Heart of the Dragon"

I want to rise and go to Socotra, island of frankincense and myrrh and dragon's blood, and to sit in the intensely dense umbra of the dragon's blood tree under whose protection its offspring grow, and to shelter in the innocence of unwitting things, and to wait for the branches to branch into branches that branch, to wait the years it takes for the leaves to fall, for the leaves to simultaneously replace the fallen.
Cut, the tree exudes a thick red blood that binds wounds—if only blood could heal us on the mainlands where the motherless children shoulder guns, or shake as they scrape among the ruins, where there is war and war and will be more war world without end.

Judy Kronenfeld

“Heart of the Dragon”

inspired by the Beth Moon photograph

I would walk through the desert seek the unforgiving shade of flame trees burn my soles on the stones warming geckos' bellies taunting my thickened tongue my salted brow incapable of sweat so desiccated my veins

I would walk through the scrub brush forget the smells other than bleached dust that stung my nostrils and choked my throat my mind focused on a horizon that danced to a rhythm I could not hear, the rabbits and mice finding water in a language I could not understand

I would walk through the dunes until I came to the land of dragon's blood trees welcome wooden parasols and talismans of currents underneath

I would dig and scratch with newfound faith in survival until I found the trickle until I tasted the rivulet until I poured sweet drops on my neck

112 in a baptism more welcome than my first

Heather Bourbeau

Appropriation

Beth Moon, "Heart of the Dragon"

We poets might say: your branches are the dense web that holds the heavens above us. Or:

your branches plait the air we breathe.

Perhaps we'll crown you tree of the world on which we'll climb to a green thought, trying to outdo your crown. But oh, fellow beast-namers, bird-namers, receivers of every herb that bears seed, of every fruit, negligent stewards, is this the kind of thinking that led us down the garden path in the first place, and out?

Dragon's blood tree whose ancestors came before us, who might endure beyond us, if we don't annihilate nature before her time, can I look at you as you, and not through my greedy eyes that make you part of my mind?

Can I take you into myself and let you be yourself, you through whom red-flashed starlings dart, whose berries feed them?

Will I cherish you and your kind because you're twined with me?

And can that be enough?

Judy Kronenfeld

Contributors' Biographies

Cynthia Anderson lives in the Mojave Desert near Joshua Tree National Park. Her poems have appeared in journals such as Askew, Dark Matter, Apercus Quarterly, Whale Road, Knot Magazine, and Origami Poems Project. She is the author of five collections—In the Mojave, Desert Dweller, Mythic Rockscapes, and Shared Visions I and II. Cynthia co-edited the anthology A Bird Black as the Sun: California Poets on Crows & Ravens.

Mary Alexandra Agner writes of dead women, telescopes, and secrets. Each month her patrons receive science news in verse at <https://www.patreon.com/sciencenewsinverse>.

Lavina Blossom is a painter and mixed media artist as well as a poet. Her poems have appeared in various journals, including 3Elements Review, The Innisfree Poetry Journal, Kansas Quarterly, The Literary Review, The Paris Review, Poemeleon, and Prompt and Circumstance. She is an Associate Editor of Poetry for Inlandia: a Literary Journey. And she teaches visual art to children and seniors.

Tara Betts is the author of Break the Habit and Arc & Hue. Her chapbooks include Never Been Lois Lane, 7 x 7: kwansabas, and THE GREATEST!: An Homage to Muhammad Ali. Her writing has appeared in POETRY, Obsidian, Callaloo, and several anthologies. Betts earned her MFA at New England College and her Ph.D. in English at Binghamton University. She teaches at University of Illinois-Chicago.

Heather Bourbeau has been published in 100 Word Story, Cleaver, Duende, Francis Ford Coppola Winery's Vendetta Chalkboard, Nailed, Open City, and The Stockholm Review of Literature. She was nominated for a Pushcart Prize. Her journalism has appeared in The Economist, The Financial Times, Foreign Affairs, and Foreign Policy. She was a contributing writer to Not On Our Watch: A Mission to End Genocide in Darfur and Beyond with Don Cheadle and John Prendergast.

Nancy Scott Campbell is a Physical Therapist, a Mediator and has taught English as a Second Language. Her poems have appeared in frogpond, Inlandia, Woman In Metaphor (ekphrastic) among others. Her trade books are titled Life Is the Poem and Moment. Nancy lives in Palm Springs, enjoys hiking, snow shoeing and body surfing, but has a gift for just sitting around.

Carol Dorf's chapbook Theory Headed Dragon, is available through Finishing Line Press. Her poetry has been published in Spillway, Sin Fronteras, Antiphon, Maintenant, OVS, Best of Indie Lit New England, and elsewhere. She is poetry editor of Talking Writing and teaches mathematics in Berkeley, CA.

Peg Duthie works at a museum in Nashville, Tennessee. She is the author of MEASURED EXTRAVAGANCE (Upper Rubber Boot, 2012) and there's more about her at nashpanache.com.

Marta Ferguson is the co-editor of Drawn to Marvel: Poems from the Comic Books (Minor Arcana Press, 2014) and the author of Mustang Sally Pays Her Debt to Wilson Pickett (Main Street Rag, 2005). Her poetry has appeared in dozens of literary magazines, including The Cortland Review, Poet Lore, So to Speak, Spillway, Rattle, and Prairie Schooner. She is the sole proprietor of Wordhound Writing & Editing Services, LLC (<http://www.wordhound.com>).

Winner of the 2001 National Poetry Book Award from Salmon Press for At the Turning of the Light, CB Follett has been nominated for nine Pushcart Prizes, as well as ten times as an individual poet. Poems have appeared in many magazines and anthologies and she has received many awards and honors both nationally and internationally. She has ten poetry collections and numerous chapbooks. Follett was Poet Laureate of Marin County 2010-2013.

Grace Marie Grafton is the author of six collections of poetry, most recently 'Jester' from Hip Pocket Press. Her themes range from lyrical sonnets to sestinas to experimental prose poems, with a concentration on response to fine art. Her poems have won honors from The Bellingham

Review, Sycamore Review, Keats Soul Making contest, and Poetic Matrix. Poems recently appear in Fifth Wednesday, The Cortland Review, Ambush Review, West Trestle Review, and Askew, among others.

Torrin A. Greathouse is a Literary Journalism student and governing member of the Uncultivated Rabbits spoken word collective at UC Irvine. They were the 2015 winner of the Orange County Poetry Slam. Torrin's work has been published in several magazines including Rust + Moth, Chiron Review, Crack the Spine, and one chapbook Cosmic Taxi Driver Blues. They are currently employed as the executive assistant of a sustainable lighting firm. Their previous jobs include security guard, farm hand, antique store clerk, and tattoo artist.

Sonia Greenfield was born and raised in Peekskill, New York, and her poems, essays, and fiction have appeared in a variety of places, including in 2010 Best American Poetry, The Bellevue Literary Review, Cimarron Review, Cream City Review, The Massachusetts Review, and Rattle. Her book, Boy with a Halo at the Farmer's Market, won the 2014 Codhill Poetry Prize. She lives with her husband and son in Los Angeles, California, where she teaches writing at USC.

Cindy Bousquet Harris is a poet and a licensed marriage and family therapist. Her poems can be found in Blue Heron Review, Eclectica, Indiana Voice Journal, Inlandia: A Literary Journey, and an anthology from Poetry Contests for a Cause. Cindy lives in southern California with her husband and their children.

Juleigh Howard-Hobson's poetry has appeared in The Lyric, Trinacria, VerseWisconsin, The Alabama Literary Review, Caduceus, The Liberal Media Made Me Do It! (Nine Toes Press, 2014), The Best of Barefoot Muse (Barefoot Muse), Poem, Revised: 54 Poems, Re-visions, Discussions (Marion Street Press) and other places. Her work has been nominated for both The Best of the Net and The Pushcart Prize. She loves trees and lives besides a dark forest.

Charles Hood has seen over 5,000 species of birds in the wild, from Tibet to Antarctica. Among other awards, he has received a Fulbright, four Artist-in-Residencies, and a National Science Foundation grant. His book Partially Excited States comes out in 2017 from U of Wisconsin Press, followed by Mouth, winner the Kenneth Patchen Award, and a nonfiction book about urban nature in Los Angeles. Charles lives and teaches in the Mojave Desert, where he sees hundreds of ravens daily.

Tim Kahl [<http://www.timkahl.com>] is the author of Possessing Yourself (CW Books, 2009), The Century of Travel (CW Books, 2012) and The String of Islands (Dink, 2015). His work has been published in many journals in the US and abroad. He is co-editor of Clade Song and is the vice president and events coordinator of The Sacramento Poetry Center. He currently teaches at California State University, Sacramento.

Babo Kamel's poems have appeared in The Greensboro Review, Alligator Juniper, The Grolier Poetry Prize, Contemporary Verse 2 among others. She was a winner of The Charlotte Newberger Poetry Prize, which was published in Lilith Magazine. Originally from Montreal, she now resides in Venice, Florida.

Lois P. Jones has work published or forthcoming in several anthologies including The Poet's Quest for God (Eyewear Publishing), Wide Awake: Poetry of Los Angeles and Beyond (The Pacific Coast Poetry Series) 30 Days (Tupelo Press) and Good-Bye Mexico (Texas Review Press). Some publications include Narrative, American Poetry Journal, One, (Jacar Press), Tupelo Quarterly, The Warwick Review, Tiferet, Cider Press Review, and other journals in the U.S. and abroad. She is the winner of the 2012 Tiferet Poetry Prize and the 2012 Liakoura Prize. Lois is currently co-editing two collections for Glass Lyre Press: the Aeolian Harp and Peace anthologies.

Tina Kelley's third collection of poetry, Abloom and Awry, is coming soon from CavanKerry Press. Her other poetry books are Precise and The Gospel of Galore, winner of a 2003 Washington State Book Award, and she co-authored Almost Home: Helping Kids Move from Homelessness to Hope. Winner of the 2014 New Jersey Poets Prize, she was a reporter at The New York Times for a decade, sharing in a staff Pulitzer for coverage of the September 11 attacks.

Elizabeth Kerlikowske's most recent book is Last Hula (Standing Rock Cultural arts). She has several pieces in the recently-released Nothing to Declare: A Guide to the Flash Sequence. Her poem, "Bottomless Lake" was nominated for a Pushcart this year.

Helga Kidder was born in Germany's Black Forest and lives in the Tennessee hills with her husband and dog. She was awarded an MFA from Vermont College. She is co-founder of the Chattanooga Writers Guild and leads their poetry group. Her poems have been published in many journals. She has three collections of poetry, Wild Plums (2012), Luckier than the Stars (2013), and Blackberry Winter (2016).

Tricia Knoll's poetry appears in numerous journals and anthologies. Her chapbook Urban Wild (Finishing Line Press 2014) explores the interactions of humans and wildlife in urban habitat. Her recent book Ocean's Laughter (Aldrich Press 2016) combines lyric and eco-poetry about Manzanita, Oregon, a small town on the Oregon coast. Website: triciaknoll.com

Steve Klepetar's work has appeared widely, and several of his poems have been nominated for the Pushcart Prize and Best of the Net. Recent collections include My Son Writes a Report on the Warsaw Ghetto and The Li Bo Poems (forthcoming) both from Flutter Press.

Robert Knox is a poet, novelist, freelance writer and blogger (prosegarden.blogspot.com) on gardening, nature and other subjects. His poems have recently appeared in Verse-Virtual, The Poetry Superhighway, Scarlet Leaf Review, These Fragile Lilacs, Every Day Poet, Off The Coast, and other journals. He is a contributing writer for Verse-Virtual. A collection of poems, Gardeners Do It with Their Hands Dirty, will be published this year by Coda Crab Books.

Judy Kronenfeld's fourth full-length book of poetry, Bird Flying through the Banquet, will be published by FutureCycle Press in 2017. Her most recent prior collections are Shimmer (WordTech Editions, 2012), and the second edition of Light Lowering in Diminished Sevenths (Antrim House, 2012), winner of the 2007 Litchfield Review Poetry Book Prize; her most recent chapbook is Ghost Nurseries (Finishing Line, 2005). Her poems have appeared widely in print and online journals and anthologies.

Yahia Lababidi, Egyptian-American, is the author of 6 critically-acclaimed books of poetry and prose. His latest, Balancing Acts: New & Selected Poems (1993-2015) debuted at #1 on Amazon's Hot New Releases, in Spring of 2016.

Noreen Lawlor is an artist and a poet who lives in Joshua Tree, California. She has recently published a book of her poems and paintings entitled Matilija Days about her experience living in Ojai, California. She has been published in the anthologies of a A Bird Black as the Sun and the 2011 and the 2014 Writing from Inlandia as well as in The Sunrunner magazine.

W.F. Lantry, native of San Diego, currently living in DC, has three collections: The Terraced Mountain (Little Red Tree 2015), The Structure of Desire (Little Red Tree 2012) winner of a 2013 Nautilus Award, and The Language of Birds (Finishing Line 2011). He received his PhD in Creative Writing from the University of Houston. Honors include: Potomac Review, Old Red Kimono, Crucible and Cutbank Poetry Prizes and Hackney Literary Award in Poetry.

J. Lewis is an internationally published poet whose work has appeared in print in the U.S. and the U.K. and online in journals from California to Ireland to Nigeria.

Christina Lovin's writing has appeared in over one hundred different literary journals and anthologies, as well as five volumes of poetry--Echo, A Stirring in the Dark, Flesh, Little Fires, and What We Burned for Warmth. She is the recipient of numerous poetry awards, writing residencies, fellowships, and grants, most notably the Al Smith Fellowship from Kentucky Arts Council, Kentucky Foundation for Women, and Elizabeth George Foundation Grant.

Los Angeles poet Rick Lupert created The Poetry Super Highway (<http://poetrysuperhighway.com>) and hosted the Cobalt Cafe weekly reading for almost 21 years. He's authored 17 collections of poetry, most recently Making Love to the 50 Ft. Woman and edited the anthologies Ekphrastia Gone Wild, A Poet's Haggadah, and The Night Goes on All Night. He's widely published and reads his poetry wherever they let him.

Ellyn Maybe, Southern California based poet, United States Artist nominee 2012, has performed both nationally and internationally as a solo artist and with her band. Her work has been included in many anthologies and she is the author of numerous books and a critically acclaimed poetry/music album, Rodeo for the Sheepish (Hen House Studios). In addition to her band, her latest poetry/music project is called ellyn & robbie.

Janet McCann taught for 47 years at Texas A&M University, and is now retired. Most recent book of poetry: The Crone at the Casino, Lamar University Press, 2014. Most recent chapbook: The Dancing House, Red Bird Chapbooks, 2015.

Mary McCarthy has always been a writer but spent most of her working life as a Registered Nurse. She has had work published in many print and online journals, including Third Wednesday, Earth's Daughters, The Evening Street Review, Camel Saloon and Gnarled Oak. She was a Pushcart Prize nominee and has work forthcoming in Three Elements and Silver Birch Press.

Todd McCarty's poems have appeared in Southern Poetry Review, Quiddity, Valparaiso Poetry Review, The Laurel Review, Verse Daily, and other journals. He is a recipient of an Illinois Arts Council Grant and a Vermont Studio Center residency. Blue Press Books published his chapbook, Fall for You, and he lives in Chicago.

Kristina Moriconi is a poet, an essayist, and a visual artist. She is the author of the chapbook, No Such Place (Finishing Line Press, 2013). Her work has appeared in a variety of journals—her lyric essays most recently in Cobalt Review and Crab Creek Review and her poetry in Change Seven and December. In 2014, she was named the Montgomery County, Pennsylvania Poet Laureate. She lives and teaches now in suburban Philadelphia.

Robbi Nester is the author of an ekphrastic chapbook, Balance (White Violet, 2012) and a collection of poems, A Likely Story (Moon Tide, 2014). She also edited the anthology The Liberal Media Made Me Do It! (Nine Toes, 2014). Her poems appear regularly in Verse-Virtual, and have been published in many other journals, anthologies, and websites.

BC Petrakos is a storyteller, performance artist, award-winning playwright and Pushcart & Best Of The Web—nominated writer. She is a widely published poet whose work can be found in literary magazines and anthologies including Poetic Diversity, Falling Star, Voices of New Women Writers (Duke University Press), Magna Poets, Houston Literary Review, Red Fez, Three Rooms Press, Oakland Review, and many more. She is a founding member of International Word Bank Productions and CFO of Baxter Daniels Ink Press. Her work has been adapted into screenplays now in development.

A native New Yorker, James Penha has lived for the past quarter-century in Indonesia. He has been nominated for Pushcart Prizes in fiction and in poetry. His essay "It's Been a Long Time Coming" was featured in The New York Times "Modern Love" column in April 2016. Penha edits TheNewVerse.News, an online journal of current-events poetry. @JamesPenha Kenneth Pobo has a new book out from Blue Light Press called Bend of Quiet. His work has appeared in: Indiana Review, Nimrod, Mudfish, Hawaii Review, Pittsburgh Poetry Review, Amsterdam Review, and elsewhere.

Cati Porter is the author of Seven Floors Up, My Skies of Small Horses, and five chapbooks, most recently The Body, Like Bread. Her third full-length collection, The Body at a Loss, is forthcoming from CavanKerry Press. She is founder and editor of Poemeleon: A Journal of Poetry and executive director of the Inlandia Institute. She lives in Riverside, California, with her husband and two teenage sons.

Margo Roby has published poetry in journals such as Waterways, Reconnaissance, and the Found Poetry Review. She has two micro-chapbooks published by the Origami Poetry Project and was one of The Mayo Review's featured poets in their 25th anniversary issue, in 2015.

Susan Rogers is a practitioner of Sukyo Mahikari—a spiritual practice promoting positive thoughts, words and action. www.sukyomahikari.org Her poetry was in Pacific Asia Museum's award winning audio tour and is included in numerous anthologies and journals including The Best Poems of San Diego, Kyoto Journal, Pirene's Fountain, Tiferet and Saint Julian's Press. She was nominated for a Pushcart in 2013. Lois P. Jones interviewed her for KPFK's Poet's Café.

Jo Barbara Taylor lives near Raleigh, NC. Her poems have appeared in journals, anthologies and online; she leads poetry writing workshops through Duke Continuing Education, chairs the workshop committee for the North Carolina Poetry Society, and coordinates the poetry reading series for Quail Ridge Books in Raleigh. Of five poetry books, the most recent is How to Come and Go, published by Chatter House Press, 2016.