(Q16, ASKED FIRST NIGHT ONLY) (ASKED OF 168 RESPONDENTS)

16. Democrats say the strongest reason for comprehensive health care reform is only through an overhaul of our health care system can we guarantee quality and affordable health care for all Americans. To fix the health care system once and for all, we have to tackle all the difficult issues at once, not just the issues that are easy or politically popular. The cost of today's broken health care system is too much to bear for American families, small businesses and the American economy.

To fix the health care system once and for all, we have to tackle all the difficult issues at once, not just the issues that are easy or politically popular. 17. Republicans say the strongest reason to start the health care reform process over and focus on small pieces of legislation is the four thousand five hundred pages of congressional legislation that has passed Congress means too much government intervention and a government take-over of our health care system. The result of a government take-over is less consumer choice, reduced quality of care, and higher taxes for American families and small businesses. We need health care reform in this country, but not thousands of pages of overly complicated legislation.

Republicans say the strongest reason to start the health care reform process over and focus on smaller pieces of legislation is this is the only way we will ever have a genuinely bi-partisan effort to reform health care. The bills put together by Democrats in Congress and President Obama have been done behind closed doors and without the input of Republican ideas. To truly meet the needs of the American people, we need to put Democratic and Republican ideas on the table in full view of the American public and find areas of agreement.

There are areas of agreement between Republicans and Democrats and we need to get to work and pass those first rather than continue to fight over a bloated bill with special deals to certain legislators and favors to special interests.
